

Tinker, tailor, soldier, spy – what else?

A plenum so cluttered, it requires a genius of a ceiling!

Advances in user technologies means building plenums are getting increasingly cluttered and hence a ceiling is becoming a very important technical interface in user spaces.

What clutters the plenum? AC ducting, mechanical ventilation, pneumatic piping, power supplies, fire safety plumbing, IT cabling etc.

What does a ceiling interface? AC grilles and diffusers, luminaries, fire sprinklers, smoke detectors, microphones and loudspeakers, wireless antennae, CCTV cameras etc. Plus columns, walls and partitions.

And what may be suspended from the ceiling? Signages, uplighters, display screens, relocatable partition systems etc.

Any one of the above services can be demanding on a ceiling but the presence of so many makes it all the more complex and challenging. Hence ceiling design requires extensive and close co-ordination from the design stage. And Anutone can be your knowledge partner in this regard.

Hospital Ceilings

Hospital ceilings are perfect examples of plenum clutter.

Consider the above services vying for space in the plenum and you know why Anutone ceilings are necessary.
